

Managing huge and complex public policies such as the BFP calls for the use of tools to communicate with the beneficiaries. Such tools are both a necessity and a challenge. After completing eligibility determination and the selection of beneficiaries it is vital to deploy a set of communication tools to follow up the implementation of four key tasks by this Conditional Cash Transfer program, which are: (i) granting the BFP benefits; (ii) ensuring payments to beneficiaries; (iii) warning of the requirement to update the Federal Government's Unified Registry for Social Programs (Cadastro Único); and (iv) overseeing BFP conditionalities. The focus of this article is confined to communication channels between the government's core agencies and the program's beneficiaries. It does not explore communication vice versa, e.g. beneficiaries directly seeking information from the Ministry of Social Development (MDS) or state/municipal authorities.

The first BFP communication consists of a "welcome letter" that is sent to beneficiaries through Correios, the Brazilian postal service. This letter informs the family that it has been accepted as a beneficiary of the program, and contains information on the steps to be taken to access the initial payment. The letter also mentions the need for families to commit to the conditionalities of the program, and carries instructions on what families must do before receiving their first payment. It also provides information about payment schedules, advising that the magnetic benefit card (Social Card) will be sent by mail in up to 20 days. The letter also informs beneficiaries of other available means of obtaining the payment, existing channels of communication, and the importance of safeguarding the letter for subsequent consultation. It is reproduced in full at Annex 1.

The second communication is linked to the delivery of the BFP Social Card. The card is accompanied by a Fact Sheet about the program itself (operational aspects, responsibilities required of families, ways to contact the MDS and the Caixa Econômica Federal, and the steps that need to be taken to activate the card by registering a password in one of the Caixa lottery points (lotéricas) prior to beneficiaries being able to access payment. The person responsible for the family unit (the legally responsible individual) is requested to telephone the Caixa Call Center (Serviço de Atendimento ao Cidadão) to request activation of the card - in the nearest Caixa lottery point - before being able to use it. This correspondence also contains a consent form (Termo de Responsabilidade) for the beneficiary's signature. If some items are missing from the package the beneficiary must contact the aforementioned customer service unit. Annex II contains the full text of this item.

In addition to the above communications the ATMs also issue printed payment receipts (extratos bancários) with information on the amount and date of the benefit payment. This receipt is also used by the MDS to relay messages showing the exact status of the benefit and informing the beneficiary of the procedures and deadlines to be observed e.g. reminding beneficiaries to update their registration details and ensure that they are aware of the conditionalities under the BFP (see Table 1).

Given the positive experience of communicating with beneficiaries through the BFP Social Card, steps have been taken to improve the messages on the receipts by enhancing the flexibility of the operation to include, for example, longer and more personalized messages. Efforts have also been made to improve the type of language on the receipts and produce clearer and more readily understandable messages tailored to the different types of people that they are designed to reach.

Caixa, with the support of the MDS, launched a publicity campaign called “Keep an eye on the Bolsa Familia message”, to draw the attention of beneficiary families to the importance of reading everything printed on the receipts when they withdraw the funds at ATMs. The Bolsa Familia management network was recruited to display a series of posters in strategic places normally used by beneficiaries such as health centers, bus-stops, schools, etc. (Figure 1)¹.

The key message of this advertising campaign can also be found on the back of the first Social Card sent to beneficiaries, as follows:

Keep an eye on the Bolsa Familia message

You will get a receipt every time you draw your benefit. This is your statement. Pay close attention to this piece of paper because it contains important information about your cash benefit: registration updating, school attendance frequency, vaccination, etc.

Table 1 contains examples of messages sent to beneficiaries in this way, specifically those related to updating personal registration data).

Table 2 gives an idea of the sequence of communications via payment receipts containing guidance for beneficiaries in cases where the cadastral verification process (involving cross-checking registration details in the Unified Registry with other administrative records) has identified BFP beneficiaries with family incomes that exceed the limit of half of one minimum salary per person, (i.e. income different from that declared in the Cadastro Único).

Communication strategies with beneficiaries also involve correspondence sent through the Brazilian Postal Service. However, in view of the high costs of letters, these are reserved for special situations where it is necessary to communicate specific situations to families, such as their failure to comply with conditionalities, to notify them of training opportunities and to warn them of the need to update their data in the Cadastro Único. The use of letters means that the longer messages can be sent, especially regarding more complex situations.

An innovation in communication strategy was the launching in 2016 of the Bolsa Família smartphone application. Beneficiaries can now consult payment calendars, check his/her benefit status, see what new benefit instalments are available, and find the nearest place where the funds can be accessed (Figure 2).
